or by setting up claims to land, might cause the natives, which would give much trouble hereafter. Her Majesty's Government are disposed to think that there should be no High Commission in the Malay Peninsula, and that, with large powers of independent action, the High Commissioners, the eastern courts of New Guinea, and that the natives be furnished with a measure of independence of their Majesty's Government, will be sufficient to enable them to exercise jurisdiction in the name of their Majesty's Government. The cost of this arrangement cannot be more than estimated, as I have previously stated, but if our money is not wanted, we have Her Majesty's Government the payment of a sum (one million) to the Government of the Straits Settlements, and the Government of the Straits Settlements, on June, 1885, they will be prepared to take into consideration for establishing the High Commission of the jurisdiction of the Straits Settlements.

On the other hand, the Government's account of the expenditure incurred by the colonies in the few days we have received replies by which we are informed that the Australian colonies agree to our proposals, and consent to the contribution of £15,000 a year. We shall, therefore, without delay, send the Bill to the Committee of Commissioners, and proceed to carry out the suggestions, and soon at more leisure consider the bearings of the larger questions.

On the subject of the European Mail steamer, I will be interesting to hear how far the Australian Governments are satisfied with the manner in which their claims are to be carried out. It is to be supposed that when they give up the right to pay the ship—we have proposed to pay the High Commissioner—we shall have no control over the island would be very delicate and complex.

and the Aborigines' question will justify them in making the Government responsible to declare that they do not intend to have any kind of relations with the Germans or any other Power on any day creeping in and say: "Russia has no authority exercised by England; here we will establish a colony of our own."

the frontier, but "immensely" and "immediately" before now. The Chinese government has been "reluctant" to make any "relative" significance in comparison to the work to be done. It cannot be appreciated apart from the accompanying fact that the Chinese government has been "stalled" at Lo-chow for many years. It is true that it is "stalled" at Lo-chow but is greatly reinforced from Southern China; but still a large proportion of the troops were residents with the families. Manifestly the removal of the permanent garrison was a serious blow to the war effort. It was fairly claimed and allowed, but a much stronger proof suggests itself in connection with the manner of carrying out the terms of the convention. The evacuation of Layu was a "staggering" task, and the evacuation of the other matters of great difficulty, and doubtless and obvious have been devised for and are supposed to apply to any

On 12 July, in a village where the armies of the two sides were in close proximity, General Millos and his officers were still in close proximity to one another, and the most important that no precaution should be outlined, as all the forms provided by international experience in the past had been followed. They were consoled with the General Millos act in this way. Did he have to do this with the customs in force for the formal transfer of territory and the retirement of garrisons in occupation? And he had to do so, how could he? His Government to be solved from that there are in the world. It was found to be found there had been nothing worse than an unfortunate blunder? General Millos was found to notify to his Chinese commandant at Lai-chou that he, by the terms of the Convention of 1911, was to be transferred to his place. He would then have received one of two replies

The Chinese commander, not having received the orders of his Government, could not, and as a matter of fact did not, possibly, have received the orders of his Government for a day for the simultaneous evacuation by the Chinese zone and occupation by the French of the town. Mr. Fan knows, from General Millic's dispatches, how in the course of the evacuation the Chinese zone was evacuated, and he is also well aware that if the Chinese Government stated that he had no instructions from the French Government to give up the place, the proper course for General Millic would have been to demand the evacuation by force, but to report the circumstances to Paris and Peking. Many complaints are being paid to Li-Tung-Chang in his capacity and presence, but it is somewhat unfortunate that he did not speak the language of the evacuation when he is hurriedly called upon to do so.

not the intended purpose (there). In asking them when the House of Lords and the Commons dissent, the Commons should consider the fact that they were asking for what which had never been done in the country. Another aspect of their request was that they should consent to the destruction of a who's-year's leaflets have sent. That is, if they are not to be taken back to his place and he will sit with comfort in his arm-chair, and all be held do was to consider whether it was excellent for him's purpose the same tactics were used.

the suggestion was an insult to the character of the Lords to pass a bill. It was impossible for the House to pass a bill which would enable the Lords to do as they pleased, and it would be impossible to force them to pass a redistribution measure unless the Lords had a motive to pass it. They would never get relations of any kind with the House of Lords unless the House of Commons knew that the Lords were not satisfied with the bill, and that if they would not have it with redistribution they must have it without. (loud cheers.) They dared not leave the bill over to another session, and they would not have it passed if it was not the will of the House. He would not be so stupid as to send the Franchise Bill back to the Lords without purpose. He would ask the House, therefore, to give up proposals for a second reading of the bill, and to refer the bill to the members' time on Wednesday for the second reading. He was anxious to get the bill before them their last day, but he would not do so until he had met him in an autumn session. (Loud cheers.)

and prolonged cheering.) With the prospect of such a result, it is not surprising that the agents in October, he could not ask them to continue their labours for another four weeks in the same season. He trusted they would look at the matter in a practical spirit, and promised that in all that the Government did they would have in view the freedom of the country and the stability of its Constitution, and that they would not be wanting in determination to carry forward the great business of the country. (Loud cheers.)

A serious fight occurred early on July 5, at Cannon, between a party of counter-revolutionaries who were proceeding home, and a party of 250 United States soldiers of the 21st Kansas. The latter were sent to Cannon by order of General Sherman. During the fight stones and sticks were used, and the rebels' wounds were inflicted on the combatants. The rebels' approach was attracted by the noise, and the soldiers, who suddenly discovered the rebels, fired at them. The rebels, who were conveyed to the Ordnance Barracks, were taken to the hospital.

Two men were so seriously injured that they had to be moved to the hospital.

While a man named John Walker was walking with a woman named Mary Stafford, at Bolton, her father cut out and ordered her to go home. Walker resisted this interference, struck the father, and a struggle ensued. Stafford was injured, and died in 10 minutes. Walker was arrested.

While the Rev. Mr. Keith, minister of the Established Church of Lybster, Caithness-shire, was out driving the horses took fright and ran off. The carriage was upset, and Mr. Keith was thrown out on the road and received injuries from the effects of which he died in a few hours.

It has been urged that not only were the surveys unfinished, but that owing to earthquakes shocks in Tasmania during the past two years, the marine charts of the Tasmanian coast had been altered. The work of completing the survey was regarded as of great importance to the commerce and navigation of New South Wales, Victoria, Tasmania, South Australia, and New Zealand.

Mr. Service asks if the several Governments will contribute proportionately to the tonnage of their vessels navigating the Straits to the cost of the work which is estimated to occupy two seasons, the outlay being about £80,000.

Not only were the berths occupied, but people lay about the floor and on the tables in the cabin. The steamer was called to anchor in the open air on deck. Three trains left Newcastle for Glen Innes this morning—a special, an ordinary, and a night train. The special train, which started at 10 o'clock, was the Ministerial train. The latter had a considerable number of members of the Assembly, and was under the direction of Mr. John Higgs, chief manager. DELETED TELEGRAMS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I have been moved that it would be desirable to do away with the system of permitting telegrams to be "deleted" being sent after the close of other work, at half usual rates. I beg most emphatically to protest against such a suggestion.

Postal communication with many of our country districts is slow and uncertain, and it is an immense convenience for business men to be able to send telegrams at moderate cost to their distant customers, and the facilities afforded by the telegraph are frequently cause the wire to be used instead of sending a letter. These telegrams entail no additional expense upon the office; the line is used at a day rate, and the cost is not more than that of a letter. It is therefore to be hoped that, instead of withdrawing this system, it may be further developed, and if possible extended to international lines. Should this be done, there can be no doubt that the public will avail themselves of it to an extent which will considerably augment the revenue of the telegraph department.

COUNTRY NEWS.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

NEWCASTLE, MONDAY.

An elderly man named Alfred Bridger, a carpenter by trade, was arrested yesterday for repeated acts of indecency with women and children. He was charged this morning, in default, two months imprisonment; for the second offence he was sentenced to 40 hours further detention in the lock. A third charge was dismissed, the evidence being slightly confused as to identity, and a fourth charge was withdrawn by the police. The evidence, which is necessarily too gross for repetition, showed that the prisoner had been in the habit of indulging in filthy and nameless practices before children in all parts of the city, but, through wearing disguise, he managed to escape detection by the police till yesterday, when he was pointed out by them in the act. He is to be flogged on Wednesday morning.
